Febris, huius febris, f.g. An ague or feuer, whiche is an vnnaturall heate kendled at the harte: and brought fro thens by veynes & arteries is ſpredde into all the bodie ſenſibly hurtinge the naturall operations of it. Thereof be three kyndes accordyng to the three partes of our bodie, Diaria febris, Humoralis, and Hectica. Diaria is when the ſpirites vitalle, naturall, or animall by any diſordered cauſe are inflamed and therewith ſetteth the whole bodie in a diſtempered heate. It is reſembled to a bottell full of hoate ayre or vapour whiche warmeth the bottell that conteyneth it: and is called Diaria febris, becauſe commonly it continueth not aboue a daye. Febris Humoralis, that ryſeth of the humours conteyned in the bodie and is very dyuers and of many ſortes accordynge as the humours be putrified or not putrified, within the veynes or in other places without the veynes, all together, or any one or two geuynge the cauſe of the diſeaſe. It is reſembled to ſcaldynge water, whiche ſetteth in a heate the veſſell conteynyng it. Hectica is when the vnnaturall heate poſſeſſeth not only the ſpirites and humours but the firme partes and principal ſubſtance of the bodie, and is reſembled to a warme veſſell that heateth all thyng conteyned in it.
